“ During her tenure at Walmart Comstock Park Jackie always took great pride in her work. She also took great pride in her family, including how her father helped her to get into Walmart and find employment with them. Every time we had the pleasure of working together she would ask me, "how does my jean wall look?" Or would point out one of the many tables or racks in the women's department and say, "I just straightened all of that". To Jackie being at Walmart was so much more than a job or a paycheck. Jackie took ownership of her position and she brought joy to whomever she came into contact with both customers and fellow associates alike. She often spoke of her father and her mother and it was obvious that though they both had passed she still carried their legacies with her and held them both dear. She spoke very proudly of the home her father left her which he had designed and built, the home which she grew up in. She shared a great deal with me about her father's collection of cars which he also left to her including her mother's Cadillac DeVille and she spoke very highly of these as well. She spoke very highly of her sister too who she told me was a skilled hairdresser. I will truly miss her and she will cross my mind whenever I am at work. The department she tended to and the store as a whole will never be the same without her.
